Much of the enjoyment of the vaca-

Much of the enjoyment of the vacation, no matter where it is spent, depends upon having suitable attire, says a writer in the July Delineator.

The girl who is going away should not take her whole wardrobe, but only as many clothes as she really needs. For the mountain or seaside resorts, three muslin dresses, not too elaborate helf a down pretty white shirt and season are the shift a down pretty white shirt and season pretty white shirt season sea three muslin dresses, not too elaborate, half a dozen pretty white shirt-waists, a linen walking suit, and a tailored suit should prove sufficient, with both low and high shoes, and tennis and dancing slippers.

Country or camp life, on the other hand, requires nothing but the most services ble of clothes, and sories that count for so much. The traveling-bag fitted out with all the necessary toilet articles is no longer a fad. It has become indispensable to a traveler's comfort. It does away a traveler's comfort. It does away with the worry of remembering little things, such as tooth brushes, mirrors and the small things which are easily left behind in the rush of getting off. One of the most attractive of these types of bags is the English overnight bag, which has to a great extent taken the place of the once popular and always clumsy suit case. The latter, however, is shown in many attractive lightweight models which may be purchased at a few dollars, while the overnight bags are much more expensive.

There are other things, too, which he girl who is trying to get the most out of her vacation must do weeks before leaving home. She must write well in advance regarding rooms and rates. She must select a train that will bring her to her destination by daylight.

Then in regard to the question of sleeping cars. When reserving berths be sure to secure those in the middle of the car. They are really the safest as well as the most comfortable.

Do not use the white robe of peaceful home repose on the sleeper. Have a kimono of black crepe or surah silk or even sateen. Before going to bed go to the dressing poom to undress.

Getting back to the made-up berth at one end of the rack should be placed the waist, over the billows; at the other end, the underlinen and corsets; next, comb, brush, handglass and towel are put in the hammock which hangs across the windows, or they may be left in the windows, or they may be left in the part he of the windows, or they may be left in the part he left in the lange without the man he left in the lange without the man he left in the lange with the lange across the windows, or they may be left in the lange with the lange across the windows, or they may be left in the lange with the lange across the windows, or they may be left in the lange with the lange with which hangs across the windows, or they may be left in the hand bag. Hairpins and button hooks are wrap-ned up in a handkerchief and added. The skirt should be pinned by the band to the long curtain over the opening, thus hanging straight down and avoiding creases.

Here is an unusually interesting experience, told by a western girl with grit and business acumen. All girls should read and remember her first statement. She says:

"In all my work my policy has been to find something that people wish done and then to do it for them as well as possible; rather than to sell something to someone who does not wish it, and to be, all the while I am selling neartily ashamed of it. The thing of which I am proudest, because it is my own invention, is my trunk business. At Chrisimas and in June I get orders for the girls; trunks, acting as expressman, seeing that the June I get orders for the girls' trunks, acting as expressman, seeing that the trunks are at the proper railway stations on time. I make my contracts with reliable express companies. If the trunks are not at the right stations on time, the express company foreits a certain sum. I see that each trunk is tagged, loaded and I settle with the company, receiving from it 20 per cent of the express charges. I make $8 or $10 each time the trunks are sent out."

What will the women say to the assertion recently made by John Burns president of the British local government board, that the "seryant problem" arises not blem" arises not so much from the scarcity of good servants, as from the incompetency of present day mistresses to manage their help? Whether his charge is true or not, a girl without training for the work will as difficult to run her house and direct her servants as her husband would find it if he tried to direct a business without first learning how.

The real business of summer clothes nowadays deals heavily in the unlined lingerie frock, says Mrs. Osborn, in the July Delineator. To most ears, "lingerie" means lace and elaborateness. Literally it means anything that is linen, but everyday parlance applies the term to any kind of a thin frock that is not silk and which can visit the laundry. It may be simple as you like, especially this summer and the merest suspicion of trimming, when good lines count for so much, if it is the best of its kind, satisfies the feminine exquisite.

The crepe de Chine coat is the inseparable accompaniment of the lingerie frock. What a sensible idea The real business of summer clothes is really the ideal coat for warm weather. It is so light that its weight is negligible, and yet is warm enough to give it a real purpose, in contradistinction to the lace wraps—masses of braid and smbroidery and lace, cluny, Irish crochet, reticella and Italian cutwork—beautiful but utterly useless except for their decorative effect.

The crepe de Chine coat is the inseparable accompaniment of the lingerie frock. What a sensible idea it is! If the weather is sultry the woman is cool in her thin frock. If a treacherous little breeze springs up, bring a sudden drop in the temperature, her outer wrap affords her a welcome protection. In either case, her ensemble is much fresher and smarter than the heavy skirt and separate blouse and coat. rate blouse and coat.

But the crepe de Chine coat is quite practical for every day occasions, unless it is for real country wear. It does not catch and hold the dirt and heat like a serge, nor does it soil and rumple like a linen for train wear. The average American woman does not understand in the least the trick of dressing well for traveling. In the day coaches you will find her in her oldest and most disreputable garments, and she flutters into the parlor car gowned as for a reception. There is no excuse for one extreme or the other. Her traveling clothes should other. Her traveling clothes should be the perfection of chic neatness and simplicity. That is why a smart frock with a cool, dust-shedding crepe de Chine wrap makes the most sensible traveling costume imaginable.

A lady entered the home of a friend one day this past week, and for a moment felt she had entered a region new and frigid after the heat of the street. The carpets had been removed for the summer, and the floors, without a streak of paint or stain, had been scrubbed to a creamy whiteness, upon which reposed a few old-fashioned rag rugs. The walls, done in soft green, had been relieved of all superfluous pictures and things, while but a few restful mountain meadow and river scenes remained. The upholstered furniture had lost its warmth in cotton covering of green and white. The mantels and stands were absolutely bare, while doors and archways were clear of all dust-catching hangings. The whole effect was delightful, and one felt as though one archways were clear of all dust-catching hangings. The whole effect was delightful, and one felt as though one had entered the woods.

In another home, the walls were so littered, and the house so cluttered with "a tyranny of things"—pictures, good, bad, and indifferent: costly breakables, as well as cheap; heavy draperies, and rugs oriental and Navajo—that, notwithstanding it was one of our hottest days, the street seemed cool after this indoor-laden home, with every room choking and gasping, and representing a booth at a fair. representing a booth at a fair.

There is a rich and restful lot of paintings on exhibition in this town just now—the William Morris collection. Go there and rest today, mind and soul. Go and gaze at "Solitude" if nothing else, and while you gaze you will rest and cool off, and invite your soul. There are river, ocean, mountain and woodland scenes; and a scene in a dark, dark forest, by one of our younger artists, by the way—any one of which will refresh you and make you forget the heat of the street, and cause you to feel that nature is a good, kind, comforting mother at all seasons. Monday was a great and wonderful kind, comforting mother at all seasons. Monday was a great and wonderful bargain day, as well/as a very warm one: Women were flying hither and yon, in quest of the thing "marked down," never stopping for a moment to catch up with themselves, and rest their tired eyes, and brains, and feet, in the midst of these pictures which they passed and repassed repeatedly. No, never so much as a glance. With green fields and pastures new so near, too. What a pity!

I went to a bargain sale To buy a simple weft: But found when there. The counters bare, The customers had left.

I quickly dried my tears,
And found my recompense—
A thing divine,
At forty-nine,
Marked down from fifty cents.

No matter how hot the days, or how fiercely the pavement comes back at you, you must wear your coat—that is, if you happen to be a lady, and would obey the dictates of that tyrannical queen Fashion.

"Oh, I am so warm I am just suffering," said a fashionable girl on Main street, the other day. She was gowned in the smartest of smart linen suits.

find a fan." A young man sat on his front porch practising his flute the other evening. It was about 11 o'clock, and many good people had retired after the warm and strenuous day, and were trying to invite balmy sleep, but alas! With windows and doors wide open to the night, some people make a mistake in thinking they are open to receive other than those blown down from mountain and canyon. In one neighborhood a week ago, two high school boys were practising to beat the band away into the night; no doubt in preparation of exams, etc., the coming year, but just the same it was painful, and nerve-racking, and sleep in that quarter took flight.

Flute and cornet are bad enough, but the cheap phonograph, afloat on the summer air, night after night, is, to say the least, unpardonable. What a comfort the organ recitals in the middle of the day with heat and whispering barred out for a restful half-hour.

"Three weeks is long enough to learn cookin' and housekeepin'," said she; "taint nothing."

The little country girl speaks truly.

"Taint nothin," sure enough in certain country sections of our state. Judging by what is set out at table, together with the attention given to sanitation, generally, would take about three minutes to accomplish. It is only God's superablundance of fresh air in these country parts, that keeps people from dying off in crowds daily. But that is the country. In the city we haven't the same safeguard, and three minutes for domestic science or even three weeks is not sufficient.

Traditions Which Still Hold Icelandic People Firm in Faith

"Alfather he is called in our language, but in Old Asgard he had 12 names. He lives from everlasting, and governs all things, both great and small. He made the heaven and the earth, together with all things therein. And what is of most importance is, he made the man, and gave him spirit, which shall live forever, and never perish, although the body be turned to dust, or else burned to ashes, All who are good and virtuous shall be our heavenly Eather is to us, and our follow Christians. He was not a god of war and conquests, but rather of peaceful prosperity, and protection.

THE ICELANDER. Everything goes to show that they were peace-loving and industrious people. In Snorri Sturuson's "Helmskringla," it is frequently and unmistakably shown, that agriculture was their main industry, occasionally augmented by fishing and hunting; but as a people, they did not rely on the appeal to arms, neither for maintenance, nor for existence. Even Taor, their god of war and thunder, is seldom alluded to, as exercising his military power, nor showing his irresistably chivalry, except in the defenge of the home and family, the very opposite of the Romans. Rome relied on war and plunder for existence, but the Goths—the term Goths applied to all barbarians, and barbarism applications. to all barbarians, and barbarism ap-plied to all who did not know the Ro-man manners, nor speak the Roman language—relied for their existence on language—relied for their existence on productive sensons, and as a consequence, both parties reaped what they sowed, the Romans' destruction, and the Goths' growth and stability. While Rome was heathen, it was bad enough, for the treatment of the Christians under the dictations of Nero is in cruelunder the dictations of Nero is in cruelty unsurpassed in the history of the world, except if it were by some Gothic generals urged on by the intolerance peculiar to Christianity in all its ramifications when it had lost the priesthood of God, and the merciful influence of the Holy Ghost.

THE DARK AGES.

After martial-Christianity, came the so-called educating Christianity, which, as is well known, resulted in the also disastrous historical period, known as "the dark ages." During that time the education of the people was altogether in the hands of the clergy. And one of the chief aspirations of the Roman church being to have all literary instructions given in Latin, and thereby making it a universal, or all the world's language, and thereby pave the way for Rome becoming the queen of the whole world, all those who were ignorant in Latin were the constant subjects of contempt, ridicule, and the grossest kind of abuse, and consequently, though in the early times barbarian simply meant one who did not know the Roman manner, nor speak the Latin language, down towards the tenth century, and that even to a great extent yet, the term "barbarianism" is supposed to isgnify that every nation in the northern part of Europe was composed of people wholly uncultured, who were both cruel and continual savages, of the most inhuman and fiendish character.

WEIGHT OF EDUCATION.

At the same time it came into vogue that those who were educated were regarded as vastly superior to those who were not, at the same time education could only reach the sons and daughters of a certain class of people who reaped the benefits of all the offices. For as those who were not learned in Latin were not regarded fit to fill any office of importance, so regarded fit to fill any office of importance, so were those who were regarded too sacred to do any hard work.

That previous to the Christian era, were regarded too sacret to hard work.

That previous to the Christian era, and may be considerably later, the ancestors of the modern Teutons, Scandinavians, Anglo-Saxons, and the Celtic races, were all one people, there is but little reason to doubt, and everything goes to show that they were thrifty, intelligent, and industrious people, and of high moral character. To show this I quote Percy's translations of Mallet's Antiquities, page 205, where he says regarding the Teutons and other kindred peoples:

THE EXODUS NORTHWARD. "When the people of the north migrated into the southern parts of Europe, they carried along with them their laws of chastity, and reserve, which excited universal surprise. Salvian, a priest of Marseilles, in the fifth century, exclaims: 'Let us blush,' says he, 'and be covered with confusion which ought to produce salutary effects. Wherever the Gothes become masters, we see no longer any disorders, except amongst the old inhabitants. Our manners are reformed under the dominion of vandals. Behold an increditable event! an unheard of When the people of the north mider the dominion of vandals. Behold an increditable event! an unheard of prodigy! Barbarians have by the severity of their discipline rendered chaste the Romans themselves; and the Goths have purified those places which others had defiled by their debaucheries. A cruel nation, adds he, but worthy to be admired for their continence."

BELIEF OF THE GOTHS.

In connection with the spirit of man who was never to perish, the Goths believed in a hereafter, when the eternal universe would be divided into nine apartments or flats. The whole of the universe, supposed to consist of three general stories, the literal translation of which is the following. First the universe, supposed to consist of three general stories, the literal translation of which is the following. First, "The Upper Homes." The uppermost apartment of which was the abode of the Alfather, termed Valhall, or the Palace of the Elect. It is there that the goddess Freyja (from whom Friday is called), reunited in an eternal wedlock, all who had been married, and been faithful to their marriage covenants, while the other two apartments were set apart for to be the dwelling places of those who had been good and virtuous, one of the apartments for each sex.

I have not been able to find out what classes of beings were to occupy the five different divisions from between the third and ninth worlds, but apparently they were to be occupied by those who were worthy of less haponness than those who were to occupy the three uppermost ones, the happiness growing less until the ninth world is reached, where those are who have either committed perjury, murder, or deflied another man's wife. In some places it appears that even those who endeavor to lead any woman astray, or took any liberty with a woman who was not his wife, was to endure the or took any liberty with a woman who was not his wife, was to endure the torments of Nifibelm, or the ninth world, throughout all eternity. It pears that all but those had hopes in the life to come; but who were guilty of any of the come. who were gullty of any of the crimes just mentioned, had no hope whatever. Their punishment was to be freezing and burning at the same time, gnawed by serpents and to be wading in poison. This all continually and forever. All of which shows that good morals, and sexual purity, must have been prominent among our ancestors, previous to the Roman influence.

THE HUDGVAL SYSTEM

THE JUDICIAL SYSTEM. As the judicial no less than the legal systems established in Iceland during the latter part of the ninth century must have been similar to those of all northern. Europe at that time, and no one knows how long previously, we can with perfect confidence take examples from there, where due to the respect for the dignity of their ancestors the Icelanders never completely surrendered their inherent rights to the Roman agents. They always allowed lers never completely inherent rights to the They always allowed Roman agents. with whom they might raise sons and daughters, who were the legal heirs of their fathers, just as children born in wedlock. They also made it a law that the clergy should always preach in the Icelandic language. Records of events and actual historical works, together with religious writings, were all in that language, due to which that tongue has been wonderfully preserved, as the Icelanders of the present time understand perfectly what was written from eight to ten hundred years ago. Consequently Iceland, which never has bad 190,000 inhabitants at one time possess a beautiful and important classical language. A language which may justly be regarded the Greek of the north. This is certified to by Rudolf Keyser, Thomas Carlyle, Max Muller and others of like literary eminence.

THE FIRST SETTLEMENT.

THE FIRST SETTLEMENT. Iceland was settled completely dur-Ing the 60 years between A. D. 870 and 930, and it was that latter year that althing, or national parliament, was established; but previous to that, the whole of the country had been divided into four judicial districts known as Southern district. Western district. Northern district. And Eastern district. Each of those were again subdivided into town may be the first own that may be termed shires, or counties. In three of these there were three chiefs in each, but in the Northern one there were four. In each one of those chieftainships was a place for judiciary meetings, and a jury of from five to twelve appointed to administer justice. Next to those was what was termed forthrings domur, i. e., quarter court, which some think consisted of 38 members to have been 12 only, or may be not more than nine. The national parliament, was in session for 14 days. There was the law-yard, consisting of 14 members, i. e., the 48 chiefs, each one assisted by two counselors. Besides the president, who was elected by those what had set to the days of learning and industry.

In gard the whole 12, otherwise the case was to be lost. Apparently the chiefs are and move, and have our beings, and and move, and have our beings, and and move, and have our beings. Man have our beings and an ownen, to whom we civitally owe our beings, and an ownen, to whom we crally live and move, and have our beings. Man dawmen, to whom we crally live and move, and have our beings, and and move, and have our beings, and and women, to whom we crally live and move, and have our beings, and and women, to whom we crally live and women, to whom we wirtually owe our beings, and and women, to whom we wirtually owe our beings, and and women, to whom we crally in the heads of jury stemmelings but never served in the capacity of jury stemmelings but never served in the capacity of jury stemmelings, and and women, to whom we wire the capacity of jury stemmelings, and and ownen, to whom we our beings, and and women, to whom we wirrually owe our beings, and and women ment more than hine. The national parliament met every year in the month of June, and was in session for 14 days. There was the law-yard, consisting of 144 members, i. e., the 48 chiefs, each one assisted by two counselors. Besides the president, who was elected by those who had seats in the body legislative. It was his duty to preside who had seats in the body legislative. It was his duty to preside, and to recite to the members at the beginning of parliament the rules of order every year, and all the principal laws during every three years, or one-third of the laws that were in force every year. Every law passed must be adopted unanimously. At this place also and during the sitting of the parliament, all cases where the parties thereto did not belong to or reside in the same judicial quarter where the defendant belonged to. I think this court consisted of 48 members, 12 from each quarter, and that certain days were set apart at law, when and where it should meet to sit upon the cases belonging to this or that quarter district. It was not until in A. D. 1004 that the fifth, or court of last resort, was established. That court consisted of 48 members; but 36 only could act, the law providing that each party to the case—so as to prevent all partiality—should count six members out.
